

Why should the future be a risk?

Life is full of risks.

But I firmly believe the future shouldn't be one of them. Everyone should have the right to be hopeful about the future.

The world changes and new risks emerge. We have a responsibility to do more. We must try harder. The journey may be long, but we've already started to take action.

By identifying and anticipating new risks, we're finding new solutions to make life safer, fairer and more inclusive for as many people as possible.

On climate, we're developing customized solutions through parametric insurance, covering economic and human consequences of unexpected weather events thanks to transparent and fast financial recovery.

On health, we're expanding risk prevention efforts through key choices such as divesting from the tobacco industry and investing in user-friendly technology to help both physical and mental health.

On overall protection, we're making our products and services more accessible ensuring customers around the world gain access to protection for their families, businesses and communities.

As a world player, with the power of 145,000 committed employees and agents in 50 countries, we have the means and the ambition to recast our role, acting for individuals, economies and society's progress.

Know You Can.

Thomas Buberl
AXA Group CEO

